Here Comes Another Man in Black!

Dorking based Reside Developments is delighted to welcome its latest high profile recruit, Steve O'Halloran, who is joining the flourishing development company as Land Director.

Since its inception, founder directors Richard West and Brett Hamblin have successfully navigated the Reside business through some of the worst known recessions, to become one of the most highly respected independent regional development companies, with over 1,000 potential plots under its control.

Steve O'Halloran joins the thriving company with a wealth of experience and an equally healthy list of industry contacts. O'Halloran is noted for his exuberant personality and ability to span a number of professional disciplines, such as planning, the intricacies of land acquisition and the legal process. His list of credentials is extensive and for someone aged just 32, jumping from a PLC to an independent development company demonstrates just how confident he is in his own ability, as well as his exceptional vision for 21st century housebuilding, which he says, "Should be dynamic, creative, suit market needs and demands, and not be driven by volume and numbers. This is something on which so many of the industry operators focus far too heavily. In my opinion, the housebuilding sector needs to have some joined-up thinking and deliver properties that really are suited to the generations who want to purchase and live in quality locations. I believe that too much credence is being given to the incredibly large schemes that are akin to small towns."

Managing Directors, Richard and Brett have just collected a Guildford Civic Design Award for their incredibly successful project, The Bellairs Apartments and are very enthusiastic about Steve's appointment. Richard is delighted to have someone working alongside him at a high level and comments, "The essence of successful recruitment is to look for someone who is better than you were at the same age! In Steve we have exactly that; someone we are confident will uphold the incredibly high standards and business ethics, for which Reside is renowned."

As the company looks forward to a new year, Steve has clear vision and direction for his future, "I have goals and ambitions, and my overriding goal is to continue building the Reside brand and levy all my attention on securing excellent sites for the company. It's been a long overdue mission to move from a PLC developer back to an independent, but finally I've found the right company and one with which I know I'm going to thoroughly enjoy working - happy new horizons!"
